Dear Mr. Pancakes,

Thank you for your timely submission, or should I say submissions, regarding your proposals for your senior year of study. While we always recommend that a student prepare a backup should their initial proposal be denied, we seldom see two such fully developed proposals.

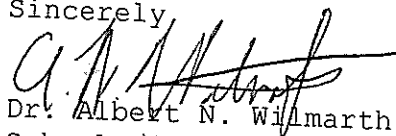

And such intriguing proposals they are! Your submissions have caused quite a stir in the department. They both seethe with potential and hint at unlocking new avenues of inquiry across multiple departments, which brings me to the point of this letter.

After much discussion with the Dean, we have determined to accept both of your proposals, but with the caveat that they not be contained within one department. Your work in non-Euclidean literature shall be continued not only within the English department, but also under the watchful eye of Professor Uphan of the Mathematics department. It is our determination that this is the only means by which your proposal will reach full fruition.

Your proposal regarding high-energy geology caused a bit of a stir and there was no unanimity in its acceptance. Nonetheless, we have decided to allow you to forge ahead with this somewhat avant-garde project and we have put Professor Dyer at your disposal moving forward.

Expect to hear a formal acceptance during the light of the next full moon, but I was too eager to provide you with our reaction to your proposals to wait for the traditional celestial alignment. Good work, son. Good work.

Sincerely,

Dr. Albert N. Wilmarth
